OUR RULE

Firm name : how we use AI at work

Effective date · Owner of this rule name

We want you to use AI where it helps. This page says how to do that without putting client or company information at risk.

What's fine

GO AHEAD

- Using the AI tool we've approved: approved tool name, signed in with your work account.
- Asking it to help with general writing, ideas, summaries of public information and explaining things.
- Drafting emails or documents that contain no client or company details.
- Anything name has already said yes to for the approved tool: e.g. summarising our own meeting notes

What needs a yes first

ASK, THEN GO

Unless it's on the "already said yes" list above, ask before you put any of these into an AI tool:

- Client files, drawings, reports or emails
- Financial records, pricing, quotes or invoices
- Contracts or legal documents
- Anything with personal details: names with addresses, phone numbers, health or employee information
- Photos or scans of any of the above (a picture of a drawing, job ticket, invoice or client document counts)

If you're not sure whether something counts, treat it as needing a yes.

What's never allowed

STOP

- ☐ Putting any of the items above into a personal or free AI account
- ☐ Using a personal phone or personal account for any of the items above, even for a quick question on site
- ☐ Installing an AI browser add-on, app or "assistant" on a work device or work phone without asking
- ☐ Letting an AI tool act for you (send, delete, pay or sign) without checking what it did
- ☐ Entering passwords, banking details or sign-in codes

WHO TO ASK

name

email or phone

BACK-UP IF THEY ARE ON A JOB

name and phone

A quick question is always better than a guess. Asking is never a problem, and nobody will be in trouble for it. If you can't reach anyone right away, don't paste it. Wait and ask later. Nothing is so urgent that it can't wait an hour.

If you've already done something you're not sure about, tell name as soon as you can. We'd rather know early and fix it together. We're mainly interested in how to make the right way easier.

Reviewed on date · Illustration generated with AI and edited.